OPEN LETTER: ON SECURITY, SOVEREIGNTY, AND THE RESPONSIBILITY TO BUILD

To Whom It May Concern,
To Civil Society Leaders, Political Activists, Media Commentators, and Concerned
Nigerians,

Socio Technologies Limited, through its SocioAfrica initiative, writes this open letter in response to recent international security actions taken against ISIS terrorist elements operating within Nigeria, and to the public reactions that have followed.

We acknowledge and commend the decisive international cooperation that led to precision strikes against deadly ISIS terrorist cells threatening Nigerian civilians and national stability. Terrorism is an enemy of humanity. Any credible action—coordinated with Nigerian authorities—that disrupts violent extremist networks and saves innocent lives deserves sober recognition, not selective outrage.

Security is not a theoretical debate. It is a lived reality for communities affected by bombings, kidnappings, displacement, and fear. When terrorists are neutralized, civilians breathe again.

On Criticism and Responsibility

We have observed intense criticism from some public figures and activists, including Mr. Omoyele Sowore and others, whose responses have focused more on condemnation than on constructive alternatives.

Criticism, when responsible, is healthy in a democracy. However, endless lamentation without solutions weakens national progress.

Nigeria and Africa do not lack critics. What we lack—urgently—are builders.

Our Position Is Clear

Instead of perpetual outrage, Socio Technologies Limited calls on critics, activists, and intellectuals to:

- Channel their energy into building advanced technologies
- Invest in science, engineering, aerospace, cybersecurity, and defense innovation
- Help develop indigenous technological capacity that reduces dependence on foreign powers
- Mentor and mobilize young Africans to design, invent, and innovate

Nations that command respect do not rely on sympathy alone—they rely on capability.

If you oppose foreign military dominance, then help build African technological strength.

If you reject external intervention, then develop local capacity to protect lives.

If you claim patriotism, then demonstrate it through innovation—not noise.

Africa Must Transition From Protest to Production

SocioAfrica's philosophy is simple:

Build, don't bemoan. Create, don't complain. Engineer the future.

True sovereignty is not achieved through hashtags or speeches alone. It is achieved through:

- Research laboratories
- Industrial capacity
- Strategic technology
- Skilled human capital

The future of Nigeria and Africa depends on what we build next, not only on what we oppose today.

Conclusion

This letter is not an attack—it is a challenge.

A challenge to every critic, activist, and leader to rise above reactionary discourse and commit to nation-building through technology, innovation, and strategic thinking.

Socio Technologies Limited and SocioAfrica remain committed to an Africa that is:

- Secure
- Technologically empowered
- Economically independent
- Respected on the global stage

History will not remember who shouted the loudest.

It will remember who built what mattered.
