The Naira Is the National Happiness of Nigerians

Dear Leaders, Citizens, and Friends of Nigeria,

I write this letter with deep concern, but also with hope.

The Nigerian naira is not just a currency used for transactions. It is a symbol of the dignity, labour, and aspirations of millions of Nigerians.

Every naira earned represents hard work — the effort of farmers in rural communities, the determination of young graduates seeking opportunities, and the resilience of traders and entrepreneurs across the country.

For decades, the naira has been the backbone of daily life in Nigeria. It has allowed families to build homes, educate children, and create businesses that support communities.

But today, many Nigerians feel the weight of economic hardship as the purchasing power of the naira continues to decline. Rising costs of food, transportation, and essential goods place increasing pressure on households across the nation.

This is not simply an economic challenge — it is a human challenge.

When the national currency loses strength, people begin to lose confidence in the future. Hope becomes fragile, and the dream of prosperity feels further away.

Yet Nigeria is a nation known for resilience. Time and again, Nigerians have demonstrated creativity, courage, and determination in the face of adversity.

That same spirit can restore the strength of the naira.

With responsible economic leadership, stronger support for local production, investments in agriculture, technology, and manufacturing, and renewed trust between institutions and citizens, the naira can once again stand tall.

Organizations like the Central Bank of Nigeria, policymakers, entrepreneurs, and citizens all share the responsibility of building a stable and prosperous economic future.

Let us remember that a strong currency is not just about exchange rates. It is about confidence, opportunity, and national pride.

The naira must once again become a symbol of hope.

When the naira is strong, Nigeria is strong.
When Nigeria is strong, its people flourish.

Let us unite to restore the value, dignity, and power of the naira — for the happiness of Nigerians today and the prosperity of generations to come.

With faith in Nigeria's future,
